Administrative law in foreign countries with a developed system of democracy and market economy serves as an effective mechanism in detail and narrowly defines the rules for administration (employees) and also a tool of effective protection of rights and freedoms, property and the individual from arbitrary government and administration. It is based on the basic principle that a citizen has the right to demand satisfaction of their rights; Public administration must satisfy them by performing their primary responsibilities.

Administrative procedures in foreign countries is an integral part of administrative law, they are universal as act as effective tools: regulation and conduct of employees of the state; fighting corruption; rights and legitimate interests of the person; in general - administrative procedures ensure the legality of administrative activities (employees).

Meeting the constitutional requirements of the person including the protection of the rights and interests is the constitutional duty of state representatives. They are held at taxpayers' expense, and it is clear that the identification of the constitutional duties of the right to provide paid «administrative services» contrary to the principles of rule of law and the rule of law, the maintenance tasks and functions of representative institutions (officials), which are based on obligation to create organizational conditions for decent conditions of life, protection of rights and interests (unfortunately, administrative and legal science it usually comes to the constitutional duties of citizens).

Unlike the existing proposals «improving the constitutional regulation of relations» required real determination of the constitutional and legislative levels the status of state and local governments (employees), the contents of which will provide a clear stipulation of tasks, functions, duties and responsibilities. The proposed reform will not be complete if further administrative science will dominate dogma regulation of social relations in the abstract edition 1938. The presence due to our shortcomings prevents the legal framework (introduction) administrative procedures.

Rebuilding the economy of Ukraine, fight corruption, create appropriate conditions for life, adequate protection of the rights and interests of individuals and society are possible only in case of refusal of the Soviet legal science postulates, borrowing and implementing positive experience United States, Germany and France.
